ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book was created by the brave people who live and work in the Wildland Urban Interface (WUI).

A special thank you to those who have contributed time and energy to this booklet's development, including Loriele Angle, Jacob Birdseye, Syd Blythe, Jim Broshears, Tony Campa, Paula Daneluck, Russ Fowler, David Hawks, Erik Lopez, Peggy Moak, Miram Morrill, Kieran O'Leary, Brenda Rightmyer, Chuck Rough, Carson West, Wolfy Rougle, and Dan Wormhoudt. Many of the poems in this booklet were written by Calli-Jane West over several years as she worked in the WUI to support wildfire safety, land stewardship and recovery. Her initials are noted next to the poems as C.J.W.

We want to acknowledge the lives of the 107 people who have perished in Butte County wildfires.

Our hearts grieve for their families and friends.

INTRODUCTION

We hope that this booklet helps continue the legacy of land stewardship in Butte County and provides a background to future professionals and landowners engaged in fuels reduction, watershed restoration, and forest health.

Living safely with wildfire is a task that takes a wide array of partnerships and dedication from landowners in the Wildland Urban Interface (WUI).

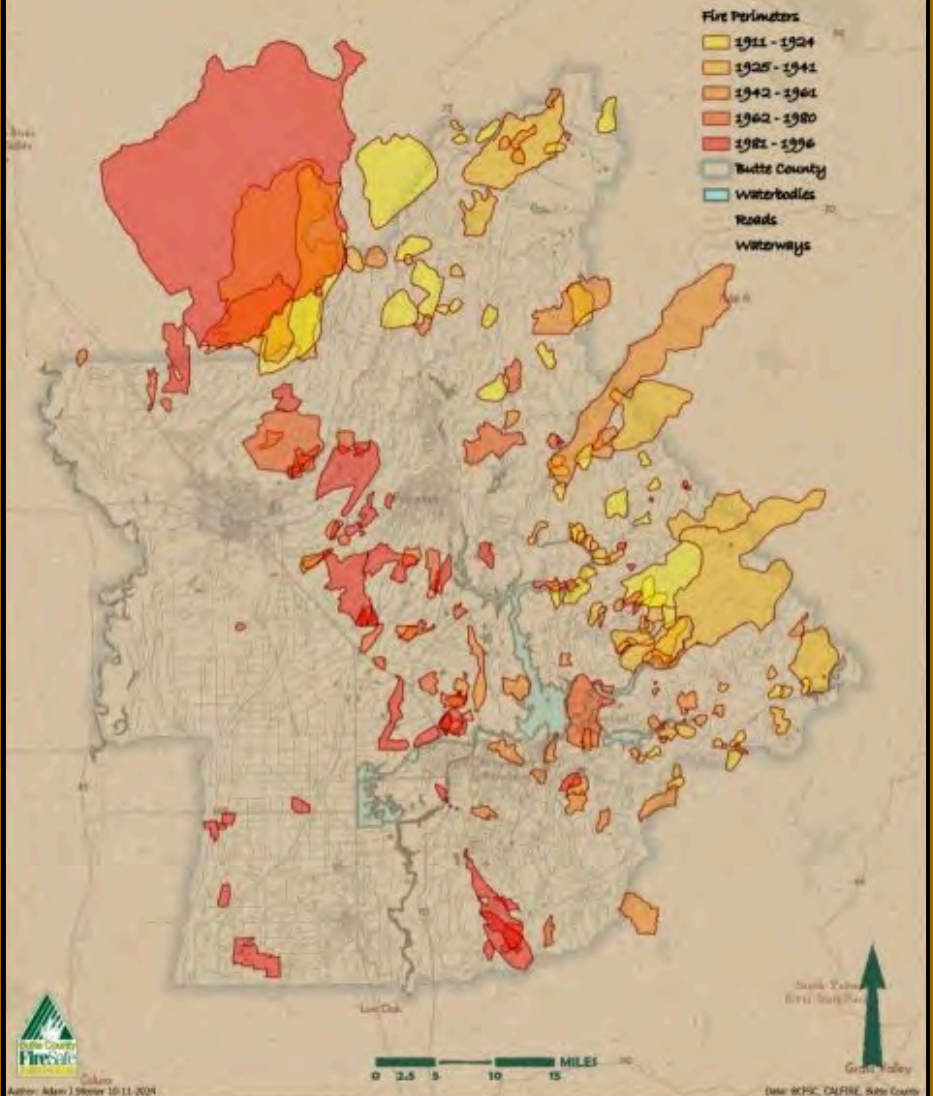

The amount of catastrophic wildfire since 1999 and their impacts to our communities has been unprecedented. As of the development of this booklet, over 60% of the forested areas of Butte County have burned. Although not all areas which burned were high severity, most were, and the overall ecological change to our forests has been incredibly devastating.

Each wildfire we experienced has brought tragedy as well as opportunities to strengthen community relationships. We are grateful to our firefighters and first responders who helped protect our communities and forests.

We look forward to a future where cultural and prescribed fire are implemented at a scale that reduces devastation in Butte County.

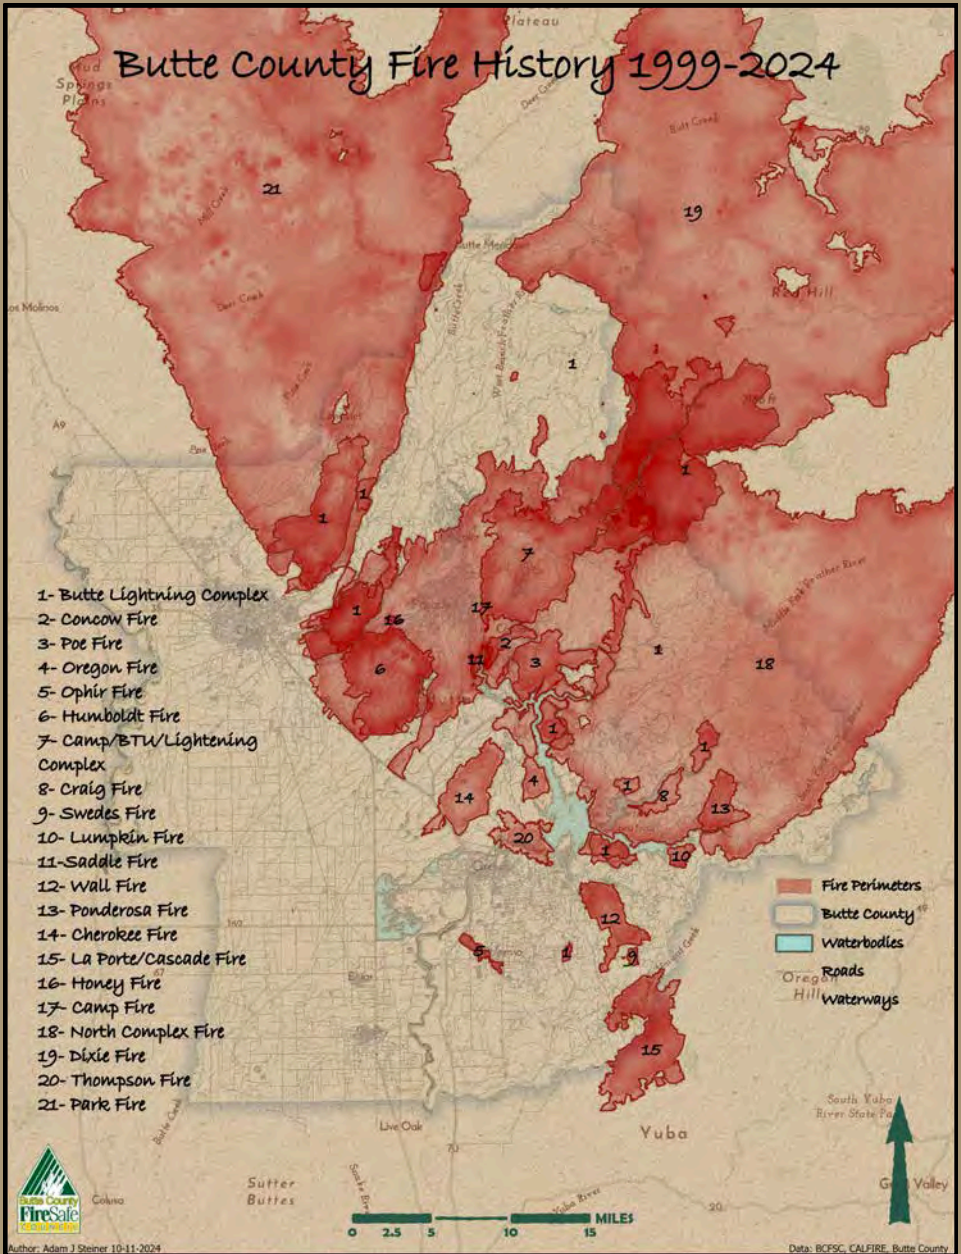

We hope this booklet helps you feel closeness with the many fire scars we live in and drive through. We also hope that you feel inspired to invest in the many community efforts that have and will continue to make differences in our overall safety and protection of forests in Butte County.

13 Ways of Looking at Fire

Before contact she crawled through the land freely
No man dared to stop here
“Respect her!” They demanded
She showed up rarely
With enough time in between to make the men miss her
She came and went as she danced through the lands
Only touching what yearned for her help
She helped with growth
She helped with food
When people got jealous of her potential
She became an outcast
Everyone forgot her beauty
They limited her path of travel
They created a monster within her
Now when she comes she makes it known
She’s abrupt and feisty
And has no cares for who she hurts
Men are scared of her now
She shows no mercy this time
One day she will be forgiving for their past
She will come back apologetic
And men will need to accept her as is Accept her and let her roam
Show her you are grateful for her help
Grateful for her potential

Bird Track on White Bark

Ishi, a Yahi, loved matches, how easily they strike fire.
Words on paper have no apparent glow.
Ishi called them bird tracks on white bark.
But words on white paper
Can move from mind to mind like flames from leaf to leaf in the wind, not one word spoken.

Author of Poemcrazy: Freeing Your Life With Words

Castles in the Sand

Just when I felt I could take a deep breath, my heart started to break... I'd fallen again! I can still hear their words like an echo in my head. From a distant hushed murmur, to a shout from within. How could they not know, I'd heard what they said? How could they not see from their faces, I read! They pointed a finger & slowly I bled, from their two-edged sword that cut deep to my soul. So fragile I was & vulnerable too, but if tender I was, then I easily bruised. I tried to explain how my life had just changed, but I tired of telling my story again. Like my crumbled down castle lay spread in the sand, it felt like my heart had been crushed once again. I thought to myself; "No you don't understand, I'm not finished yet. I've only begun something new in the sand!" I'm not over this, I know I'm not done, but give me this moment, I'm broken again. I don't need a judge, I need only a friend. One right beside me to lend me a hand & one who'll be there to help me defend. I may have lost much but my dignity stands, so come let us reason & make castles in the sand.

After Ragnarok

There's no need to worship destruction.
Surtur, the fire-demon who the Norse folk knew would burn all things crashed through here.

He turned pines into towers of ash.

Manzanitas became ebony coral, moist soil morphed into charcoal piles.

Surtur, climate change's child raised his head and roared

Quail, rattlesnakes, deer, owls bears fled. All air changed to smoke. People ran.

No one heard Surtur's howl.

Now he's moved on.

Fire fighters beat him. Land restorers started to heal the wounds he left.

There's no need to worship him.

Baldar, breath of poems and chants, song of hope, despair's foe whose death brought on this disaster, lives again.

Buckeye trees create flowers, ivory candles that crowd their branches. Grass that was tan becomes jade again. Orange poppies dance, blue lupines join in, Crumbling trees remain.

They'll sigh, collapse, feed the soil.

Animals return for Baldar's feast.

Don't worship destruction – earth will rise again.

Paul Belz

This is Paradise
After the Camp Fire

Trees that survived will be taken next.
They have suffered so much.

I see sky now,
birds that look lost.
People glare like we do not belong.

Our engine presses a lovely red hue like a flower against the burned earth.
We drive down streets
no longer named,
act surprised when we are lost.

Fire Recovery – Wall and Ponderosa

The sign on the side of the road said, “Is Your Home Ready”?

It had sat there all summer by the Wagon Wheel Market
Over 60 homes have burned in 2 fires: Wall & Ponderosa

At the wildfire recovery meeting near Kelly Ridge

A man shared how his home was saved, the newspaper reported it.

A woman shared her home was lost;
the TV had reported it too.

So many in the room are grieving loss.

C.J.W.

Alert Sounds

Alert sounds

Around the room phones go off

Tensions rise, looks are shared

How bad will it be?

The waiting begins

Do you go or do you stay?

Winds shift

Clouds form

Everyone mobilizes, some with practiced ease

Watching, waiting

Will it be enough

Disaster, Recovery

Resilient, Strong.

Pile Burning

Burning
It's time for burning brush piles
Up and down the mountain range
Brush burning hot
Leaving no smoke signals

Good Fire

Smoke snakes above the ridge line of the Sierra Nevada
On the way to Forbestown
U.S. Forest Service brings
Prescribed fire to the land

Puffy smoke plumes in the valley bloom from the rice fields Prescribed fire
a tool for the farmers too

Out of Here

"There must be some way out of here"

-Jimi Hendrix

Smoke, again, back home
Stars twinkle over the pass
I sit this one out

On our way to Idaho
Brother's dozer cutting line

While I've seen the sky
Rain ash many times before
I'll sit this one out.

Rebekah Casey

I grew up in Concow with the sky raining ash from time to time. "Is it time to leave?" I'd ask. "Not yet," my father would console me. This haiku is about the time I could not sit astride another fire.

This time, I left my children for Yankee Hill to coax my parents out on the evacuation warning. They have already lost two homes, leaving with fire raging at their heels. My father, strong, brave and keen, didn't want to evacuate. He tried to console me.

Brothers, cousins, uncle on the fire line running dozers, excavators, low-boys, water trucks. I couldn't sit with myself, with them on the edge of fire. This time, I headed with the kids to Idaho for deep breaths under blue skies.

Billie the Goat – A Paradise Legend

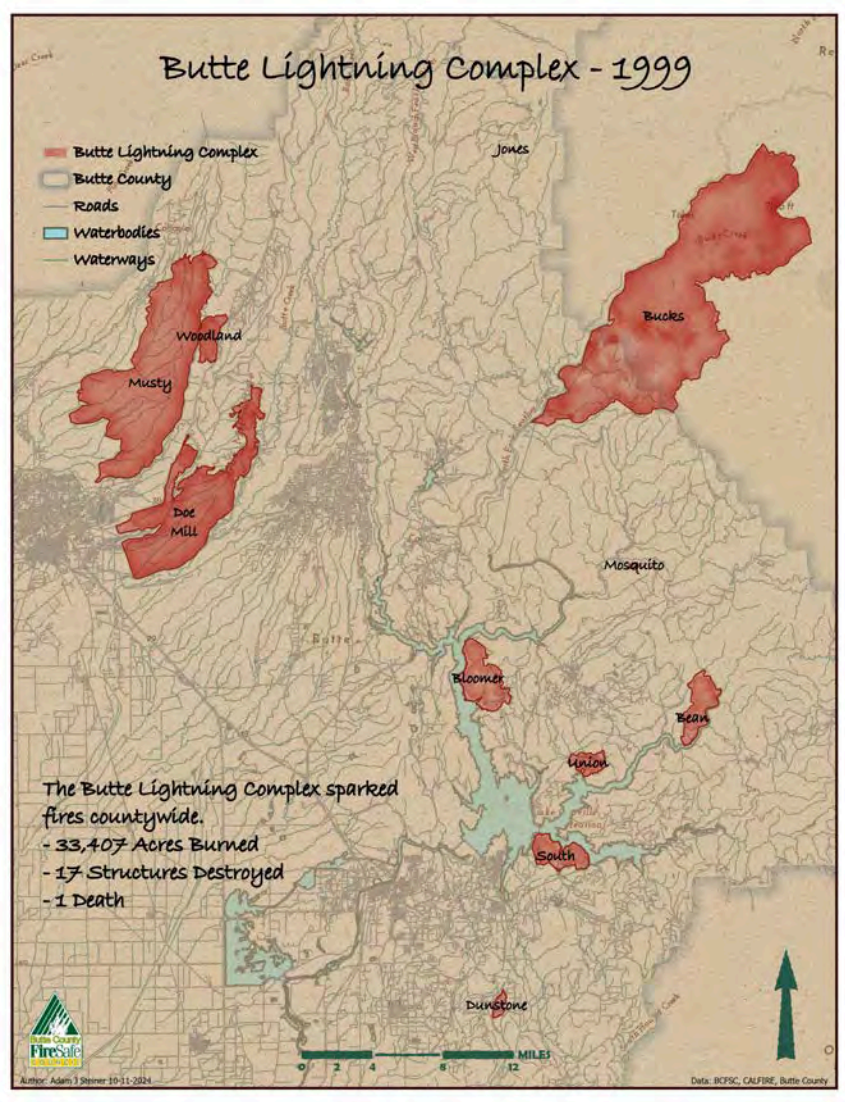

Crafted for the Paradise Revival Festival 2022

Just a week old, the baby goat sets out on his purpose his small hooves travel lightly across the red soil
He follows a trail through the young brush
The path he travels was black and covered in soot after wildfire
The sound of munching leaves is loud as he totters to his siblings
A herd dog watches closely to ensure he rejoins his mother safely
As the season changes and years pass on
He will continue his work
Keeping the Ridge safe

On July 1, 1999, a dry lightning storm hit Northern California, igniting the Butte Lightning Complex. The fires lasted approximately two months, with major fires like the Musty and Doe Mill fires transforming forested areas into brush fields and leading to the establishment of local fire safe councils.

Forming Fire Safe Councils

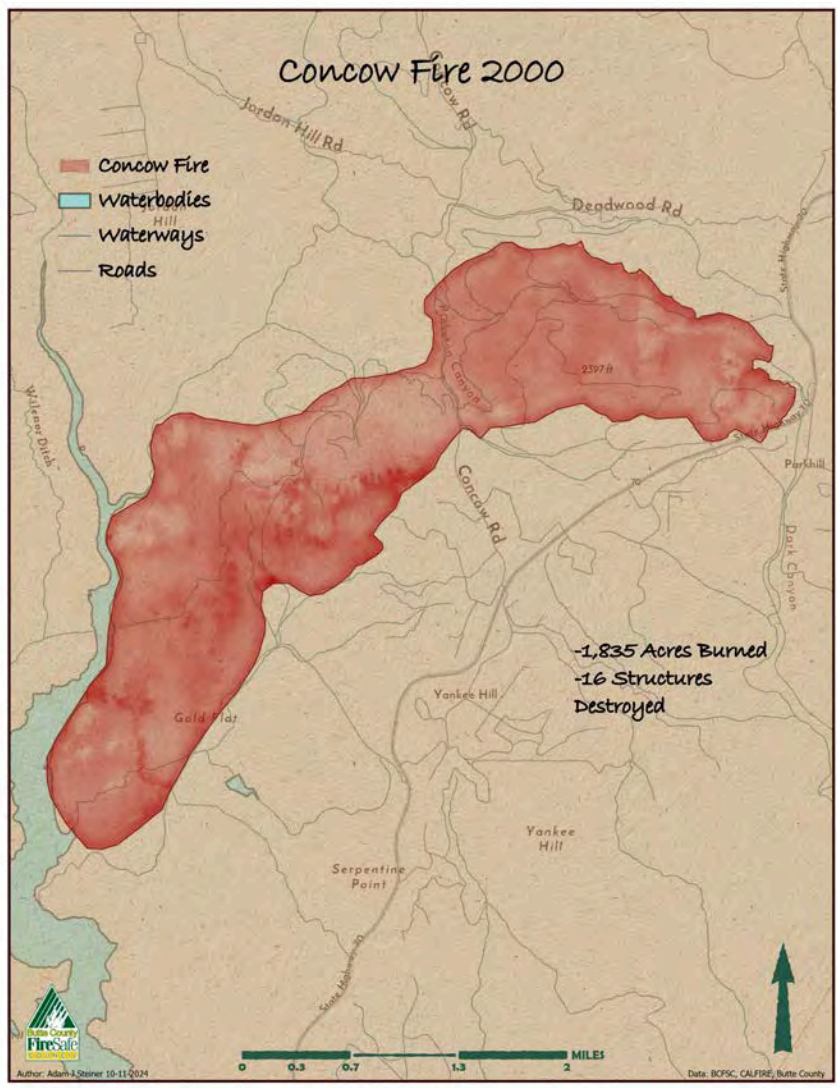

Lightning on the hillsides
A dry lightning storm
Strikes in the night

Flames light up the dark
Spreading across the hillsides
Leaving huge patches burned
To become fire scars

Flames light up hearts
Igniting community spirit
Forming fire safe councils
Around the fire scars

The Concow Fire, which occurred from September 19-20, 2000, was human-caused. Tragically, one resident lost her life while trying to save her pets, and a firefighter was injured during the rescue effort.

Learning to Live with Wildfire

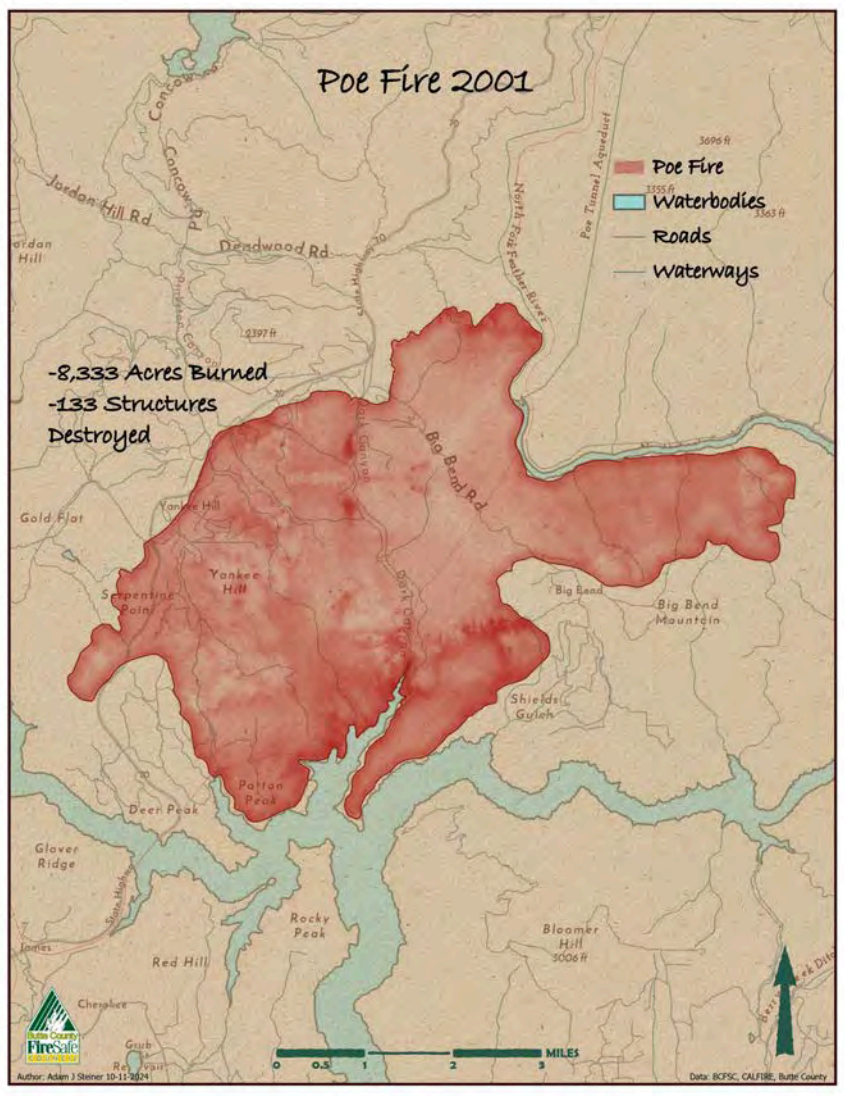

Concow pool
A community place
just a small drop of water
Centered in the fire's footprint

Thick forest grew tall behind the pool
The fire burned the trees
Leaving a steep, scabby hillside
A grim backdrop to the cool pool oasis

Concow School survived the fire
Across the street from the pool

Students go back and forth
Learning to swim
Learning to live with wildfire

The Poe Fire ignited on September 6, 2001, when a tree fell on a power line. Driven by strong winds in Yankee Hill, it burned for six days. Without a disaster declaration, residents faced resource shortages, prompting the Yankee Hill Fire Safe Council and local volunteers to lead recovery efforts.

Fire! Fire! Fire!

Roaring up from Poe in the canyon below
 Our family, friends and neighbors in its path
 Phones and power are out, no way to get reports
 We fear for the Moak Ranch in Yankee Hill, frustration builds

Pete can't get to the ranch—the roads are blocked!
 Then the fire rages, making a fast run from Big Bend through Yankee Hill
 The roadblock opens – wow!
 From Concow Pete and I rush to the ranch

Fire on all sides of us for miles.
 Night falls and the fire is so close
 A couple of hundred feet away
 They need well water to spray on and around the house

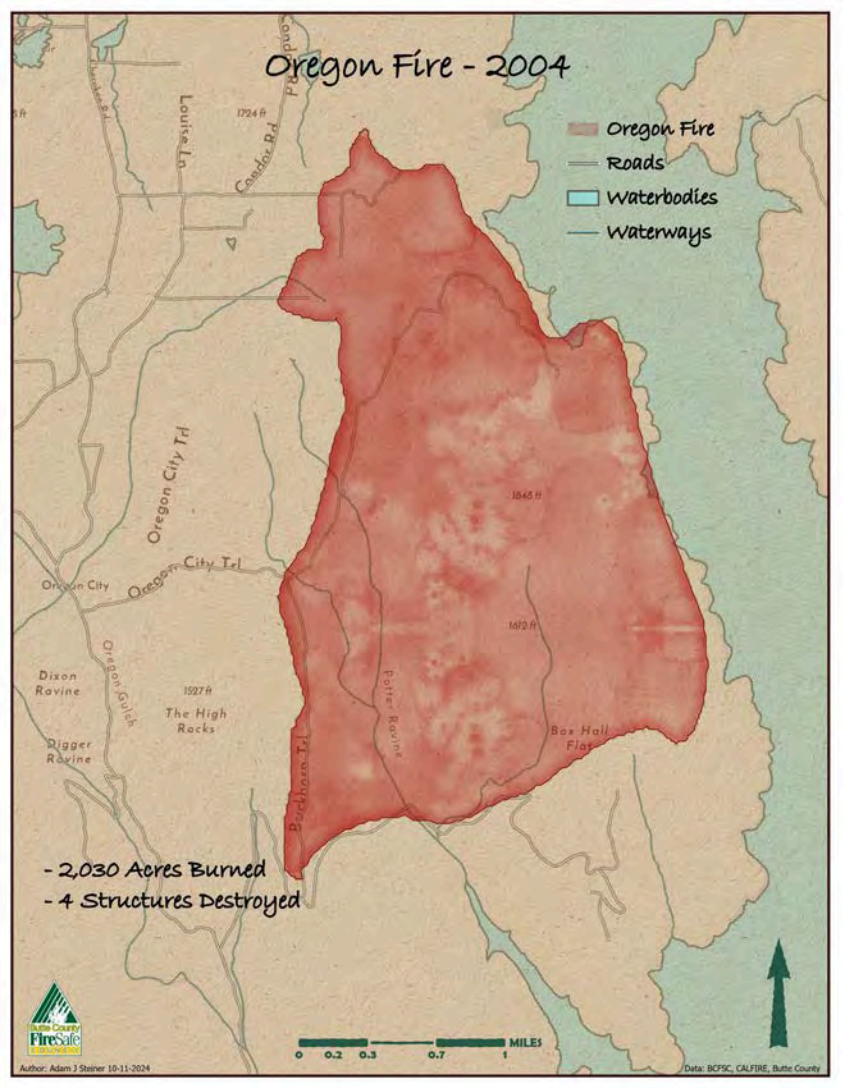

Yikes! John can't get his new generator going,
 Dang, dang, dang!
 But wait! Our generator in Concow is working – let's go get it!

It's midnight as we get the generator up on the truck bed.
 Happy Birthday, Pete – you'll not forget this 50th!

Luck is with us and we get back to the Moak Ranch without being stopped
 6 am and we are sitting in lawn chairs by the fire trucks Overhead, a helicopter arrives and showers the surging blaze with water.

We get a thorough dousing as well!
 We're laughing now, and hugging each other – we feel safe, and relieved.
 That was just the beginning of our "trials by fire".

The Oregon Fire started on August 11, 2004, near Lake Oroville, and lasted two days. Fueled by dense vegetation and extreme weather conditions, the fire spread rapidly, presenting significant challenges for firefighters. According to CAL FIRE, the fire was caused by a vehicle.

Trees I Have Never Seen

A blazing hot day with a smoke-filled sky
Ashes fall here at my feet
From trees I have never seen
Fire is destruction to people's dreams
Two times the tears rose up

C.J.W.

The Ophir Fire ignited on June 10, 2008, due to an electrical failure of a billboard under dry conditions. It was the first major fire of the summer, quickly spreading from Highway 70 and threatening farms and homes. The following day, on June 11, the Humboldt Fire began.

Flames of June

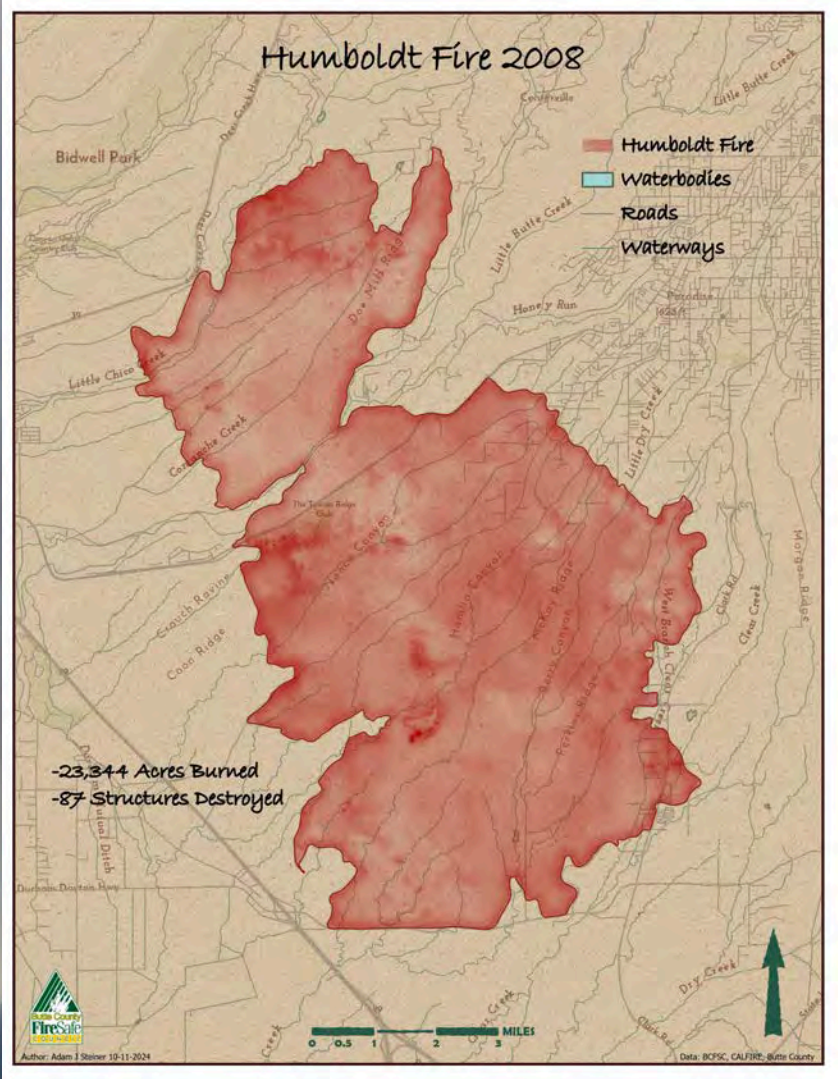

The beginning of a tragic fire season
Sparks grew to flames
From an unlikely billboard
Along the highway

The fire moved fast through the grass
In warm June air
Blown by northwest winds

Consuming homes in its path
Families will start to rebuild

C.J.W.

The Humboldt Fire started on June 11, 2008, and lasted three days. It began during a red flag warning, quickly spreading through lower Butte Creek Canyon. The fire prompted the first major evacuation of Paradise, based on a 1998 plan, which was successful but revealed the need for better evacuation and traffic control measures, such as implementing “One-Way Traffic” on Pentz Rd.

Wind and Fire

Flames moved down canyon walls
Like a wild animal
Moving in on civilization
Creating havoc in our delicate systems;
Roads, plans, commitments, resources, lives
Safe at a distance
Safe to be in awe
Of the thick smoke

Chugging, Chugging, Chugging

Lifting what was on the ground up to the sky

Safe at a distance
Maybe not for long

C.J.W.

Smoke Spirits

The smoke carries with it
 Spirits of ancient times
 Spirits of plants and animals
 Spirits of the places we call home

So thick and so dense Smoke fades the distance into a blur
 There's no fan big enough to blow it away

Smoke fills our vision and is in every breath
 Little babies and elders
 Cats and dogs in evacuation shelters
 Birds and lizards
 Even wasps and moths

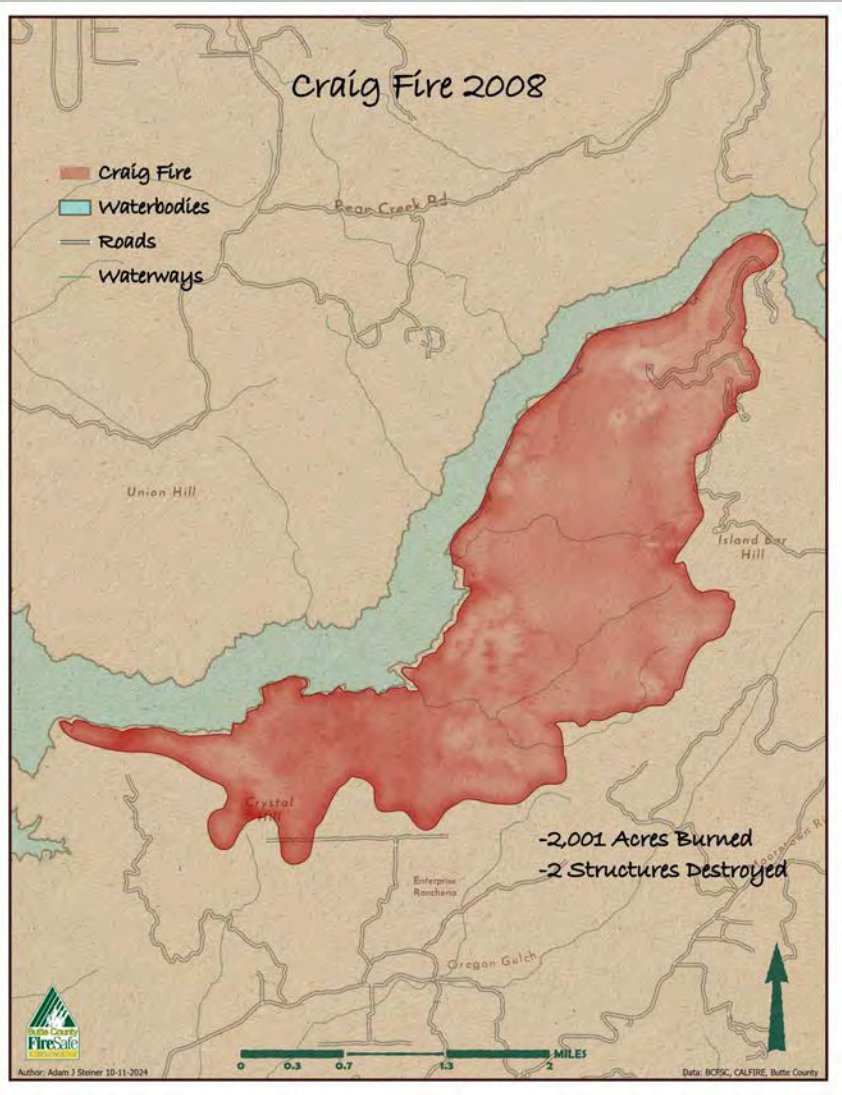

C.J.W.

Sad Calm

The wind has peeled layers of smoke from the wildfire
 The sky shyly recovers its joyous blue
 But a sad calm has settled on us
 Now our mulberries taste like ash
 And the blue oak leaves are orange.
 Our land's turned black and fragile.
 The last flames are being fought,
 The end of the fire's rage is marked by a sad calm.

C.J.W.

The Craig Fire in Feather Falls near Lake Oroville started on August 3, 2008, due to a bird hitting a power line. The fire lasted for nine days.

Gears Shifting

One plane in the sky
Flying to fight the flames
From a distance it seems calm
But the sky is streaked and dirty from the smoke

There is a fire burning in the middle fork of the Feather River
We can imagine the fire engines with gears shifting
Up and down the mountains bringing fighters to the blaze
Fight the flames

We know the people are in a frenzy,
The day came that they hoped would never come,
Seeing smoke,

Packing their cars
Not knowing enough
When would they come home?

C.J.W.

The Swedes Fire started on July 29, 2015, and took almost a week to fully contain.

Land of Wildfire

Swedes Flat was once a town
Where the hills are dry and wooly
Covered with scrub brush

Boom towns like it
Have come and gone
Fire was their constant menace

Flames destroyed nearby settlements;
Bidwell Bar 1854
Thompson Flat 1856
Oroville 1857

Sheep once roamed the hillsides
Nibbling the vegetation
But they have wandered on

Now overgrown
The shrubs spread under hot pine trees
Spot fires can easily establish

Air attack during the day
Fire crews at night

Swedes Flat
A land of wildfire

C.J.W.

The Lumpkin Fire near Forbestown started on September 11, 2015, and burned for five days. It was caused by an individual unlawfully setting fire to forestland. The US Forest Service’s 2011 Slapjack project, which focused on fuels reduction, played a key role in slowing the fire's rate of spread.

Steep Country

Among the stars
Hot wind was blowing

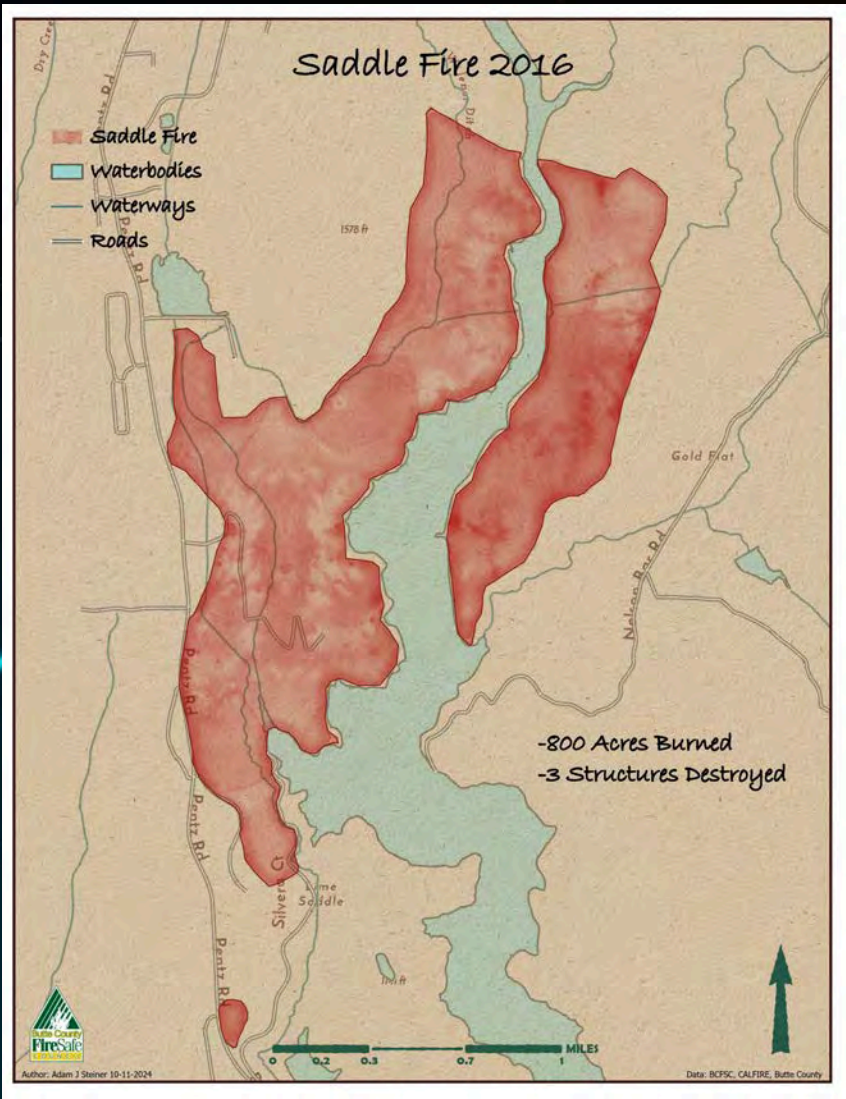

Fire weather was high
McCabe creek below

The tall flames rose up
Toward the watershed above

Scaling the vertical hillsides
Fire battling the black night
In steep country

C.J.W.

The Saddle Fire near Pentz Rd. in lower Paradise started on Labor Day, September 5, 2016, and burned for six days. It threatened the Town of Paradise and the community of Concow, while also disrupting local communications. The cause of the fire remains unknown.

Ashes in the Wind

The burned forest waits for renewal
Swirling dust devils move over the ground

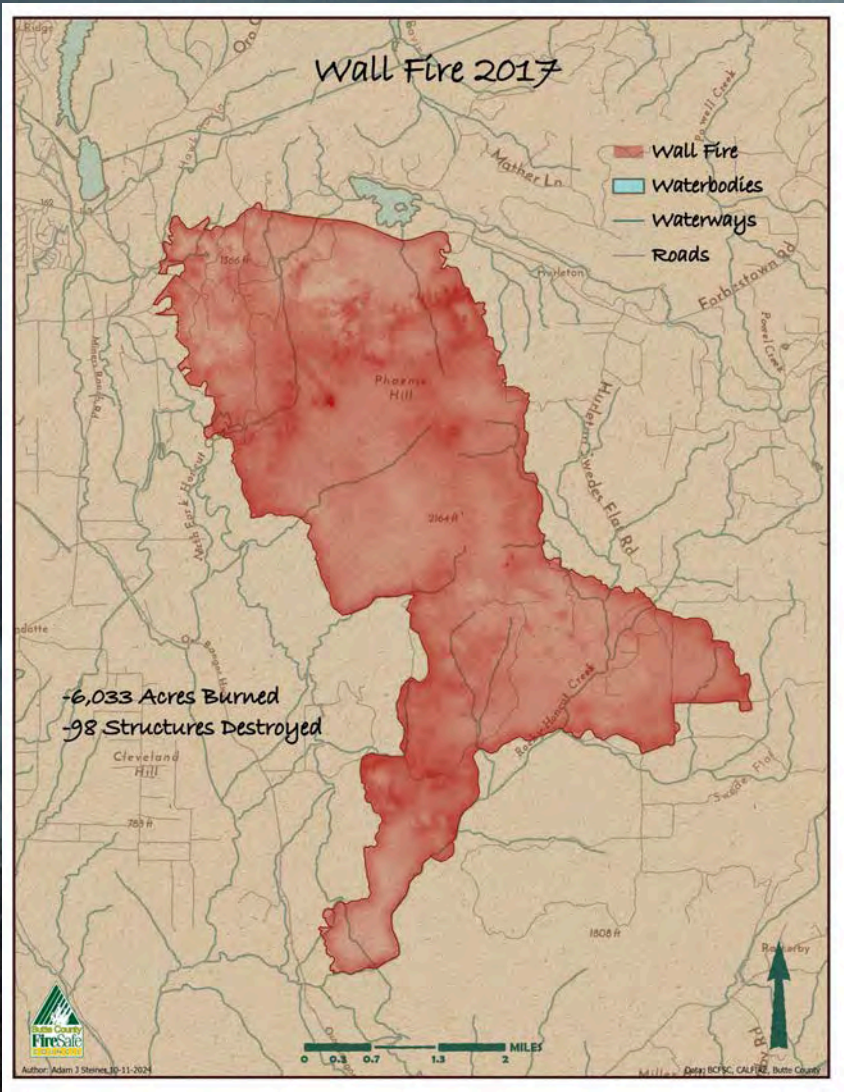

Picking up ash from the black soil
Throwing it into the air

The cool breeze of fall is chilly

Buzzards circle low in the sky
Planning their seasonal migration to new lands
Dozens and dozens

Our trees are so dry
The fire burned the flume
That brings them water
They can't migrate

C.J.W.

The Wall Fire, started on July 7, 2017, and burned for 10 days. Butte County fire investigators determined the fire was started by a defective electrical panel.

As the Crow Flies

Ash falls on our yard
The fire is 15 miles away as the crow flies,
Ash like little paper tears.

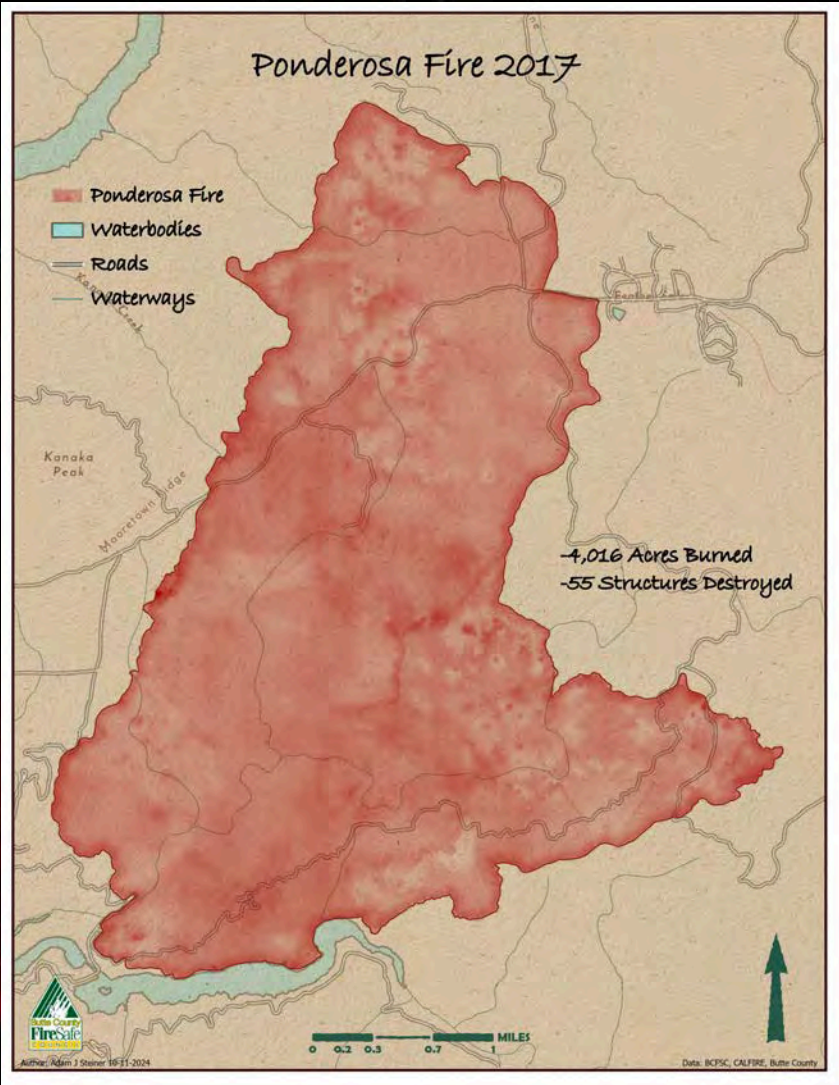

C.J.W.

Woodleaf Farm

The organic farm in the foothills
A dream we all had together
The peach trees' gentle branches made it real
An oasis among the dry blue oaks.

Then the tornado of fire
Whirled up the ravine and across the ridge
Flames licked the back of the farm
Barns and buildings were laid flat
The peach trees remain, to recover.

C.J.W.

The Ponderosa Fire started on August 29, 2017, and burned through Feather Falls, causing significant destruction to the community and threatening Forbestown.

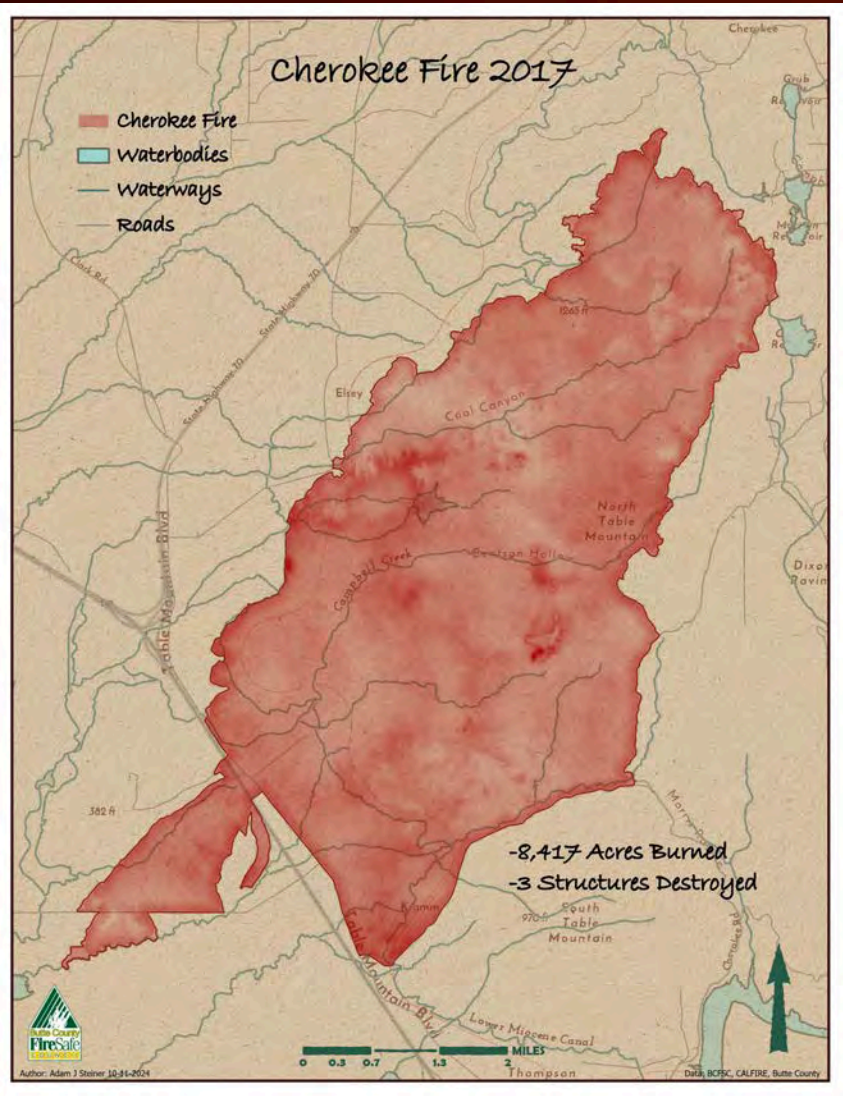

Ponderosa

Railroad spikes resting in the dust
It's quiet now in the forest where the wildfire raged up the ridge

Flames that scored the lands between Kanaka Peak and the invisible logging town of Feather Falls.

From the mountain top we see a sacred rugged land Where prayers have drifted in the wind from the Maidu, miners, loggers, and homesteaders.

C.J.W.

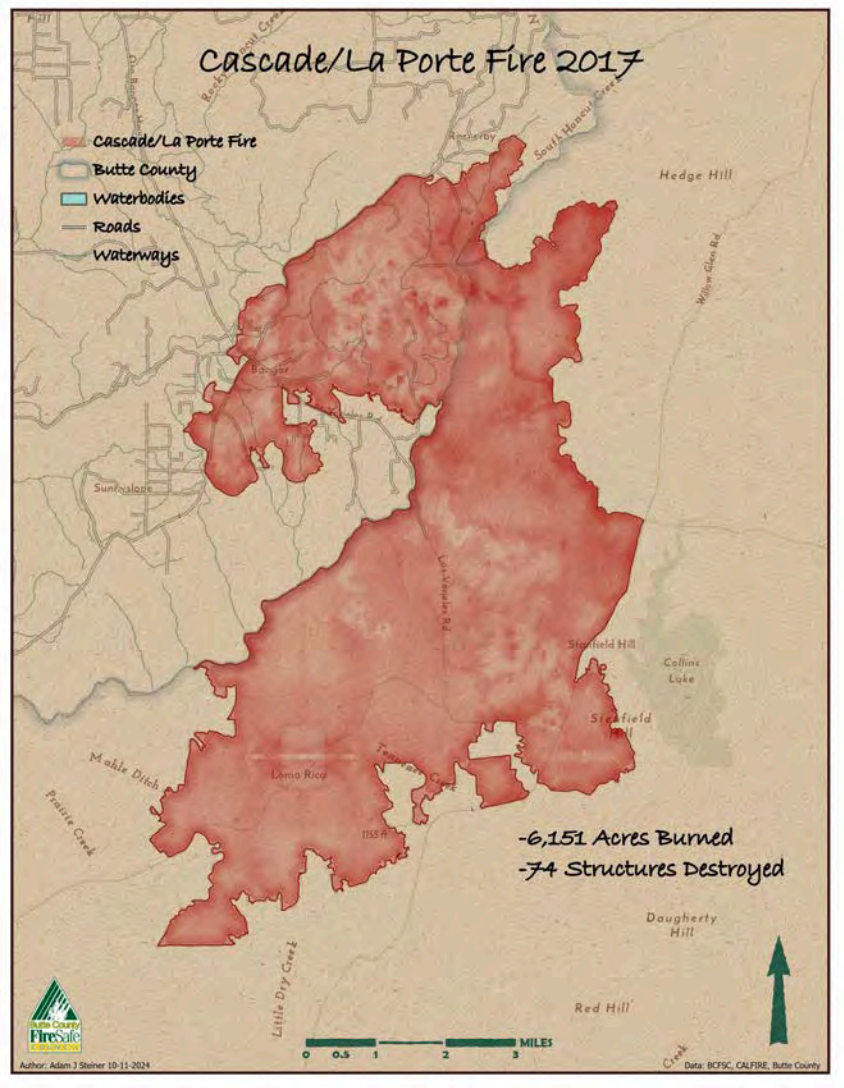

The Cherokee Fire started on October 8, 2017, and lasted 124 days. The fire was determined to have been caused by multiple Live Oak tree branches that contacted an energized powerline, which failed and ignited the surrounding vegetation.

The Land is Tired

A fire burns through the night;
Through the trees
Through the houses
Through dreams
The red moon sits low and watches
The mountains take a deep breath
Then push the thick air out
In the valley the smoke settles and swirls.
The morning sky is grey and sags low
The land is tired
But the fire burns on.

C.J.W.

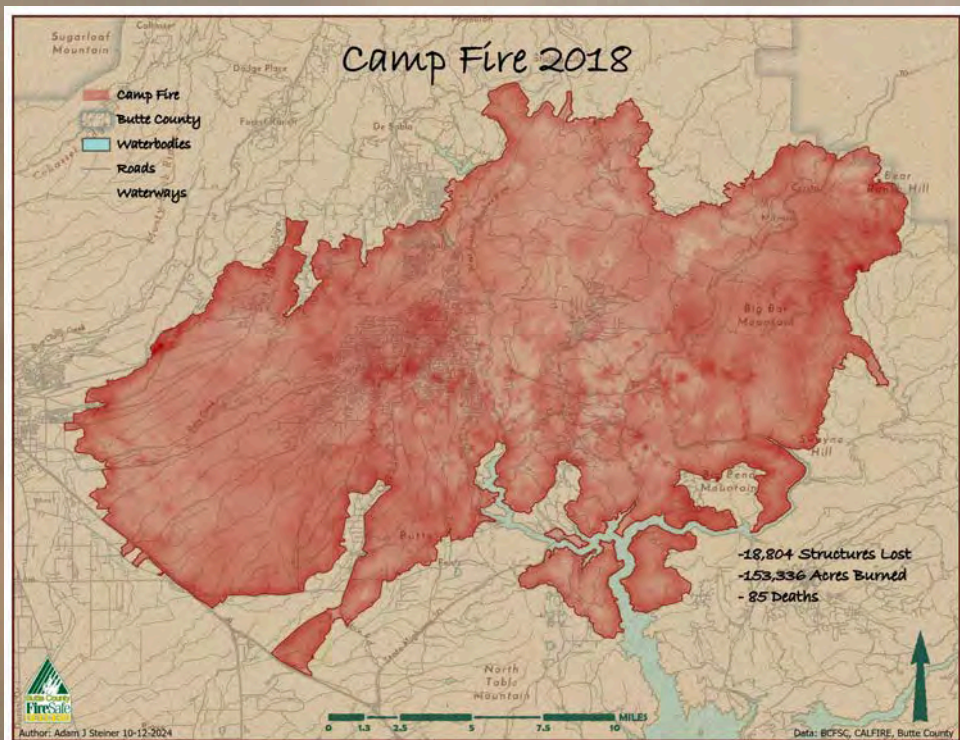

The LaPorte Fire, part of the statewide Wind Complex, began on October 9, 2017, and lasted 123 days. The investigation determined that the fire was caused by trees coming into contact with power lines.

Turning Blue

Summer is over,
And no one knows what to do,
Ashes touching my skinny shoulder,
A memory that slowly kills you,
You might think it's pneumonia,
Or a handshake of smokey fumes,
No, it's not that at all.

It's my heart,
It's turning blue.

Jacob Birdseye

The Camp Fire, ignited on November 8, 2018, lasted 18 days. It began in the flea drainage near Pulga in the Feather River Canyon. The fire impacted multiple communities and became the most destructive and deadliest wildfire in the state's history. Tragically, 85 lives were lost. Faulty PG&E electrical lines were found to be the cause, sparking public outrage and legal consequences.

After the Fire

Returning to the blue from a fiery brown sunrise
It's more than a person can imagine
Than a change in the color of the sky
At first there's a question of coming home, but why?

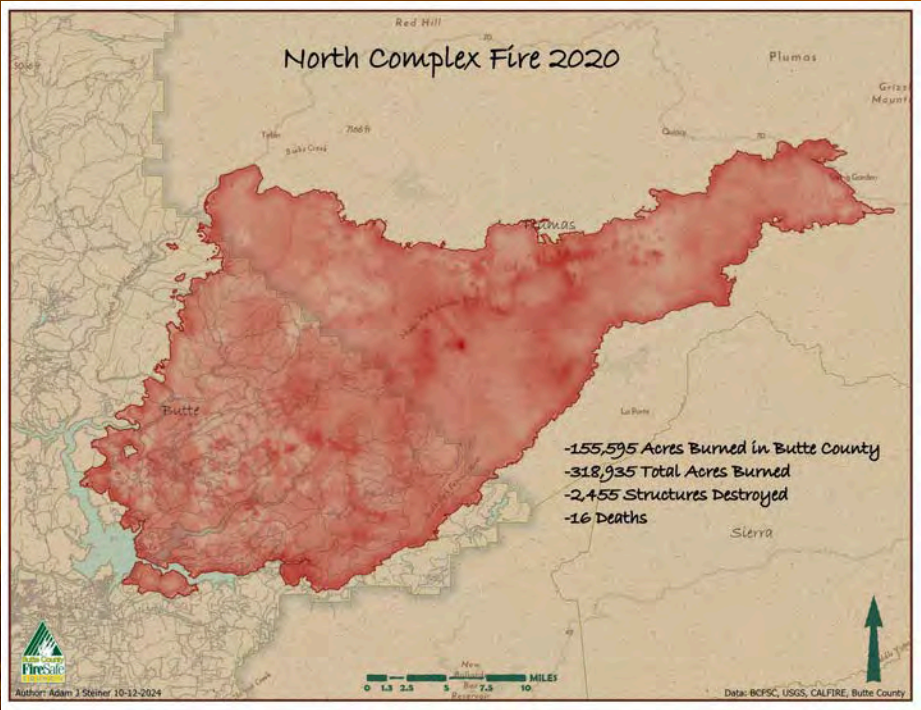

How to look past the ash and gray
How to look past a lifetime in piles of rubble
How to see light on a bleak horizon
After rain falls and mud flows, the sun returns
A sprout, a little green glimmer of hope

Time heals most wounds, some still fester
How to see what was, is no longer
Going back in pain, it's not the same
Never will be again

The new beginning is not the old memories
It's to be forged from twisted metal into a new sculpture

Made from the past, tempered to a new reality
Whose beginnings, time will tell
Some from the past, some for the future
No right, no wrong, just change

Jim Broshears

The 2020 North Complex Fire began on August 17 and lasted 109 days, lightning-sparked fires burned across multiple northern counties. Despite the efforts of 1,600 firefighters, who managed evacuations of hundreds of people, the fires ravaged critical natural areas, including the Middle Fork of the Feather River.

Trees No Longer

Like thousands of others in the past few years,
Jamie lost her home
All the things she owned
The place she loved

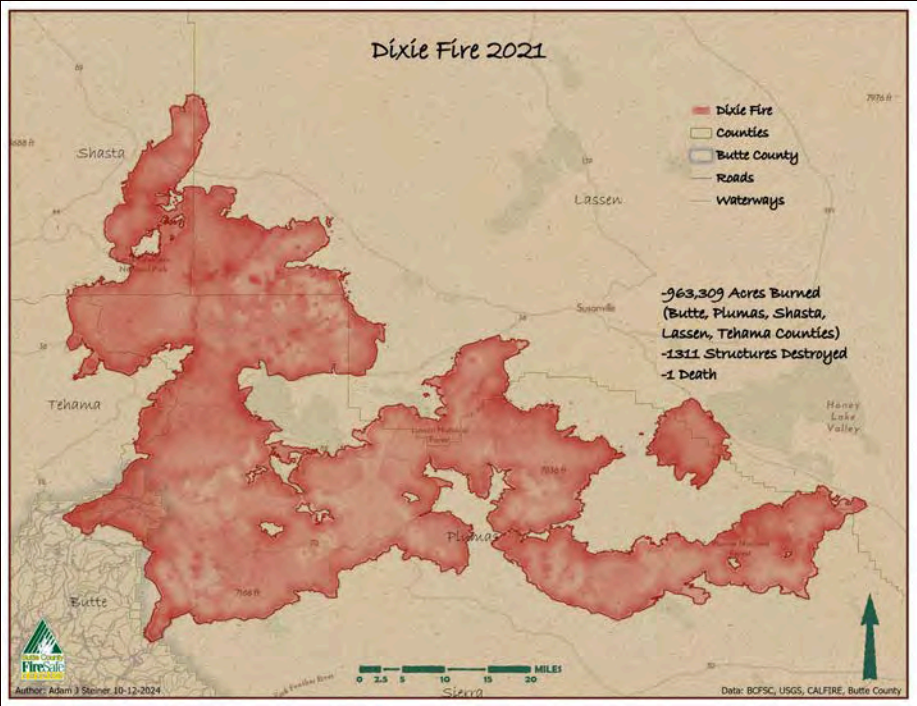

After she evacuated
Her yard was a refuge for
A deer, dog and chickens
They all perished

When she returned
The holes were dug for their burial

She's most sad about the trees that died
Not one tree survived on her 10 acres
They are now a danger
To be felled one by one.

C.J.W.

The Dixie Fire began in the Feather River canyon on July 13, and lasted over three months. The fire burned in multiple counties, including Butte, Plumas, Lassen, Tehama, and Shasta.

Up in the Forest

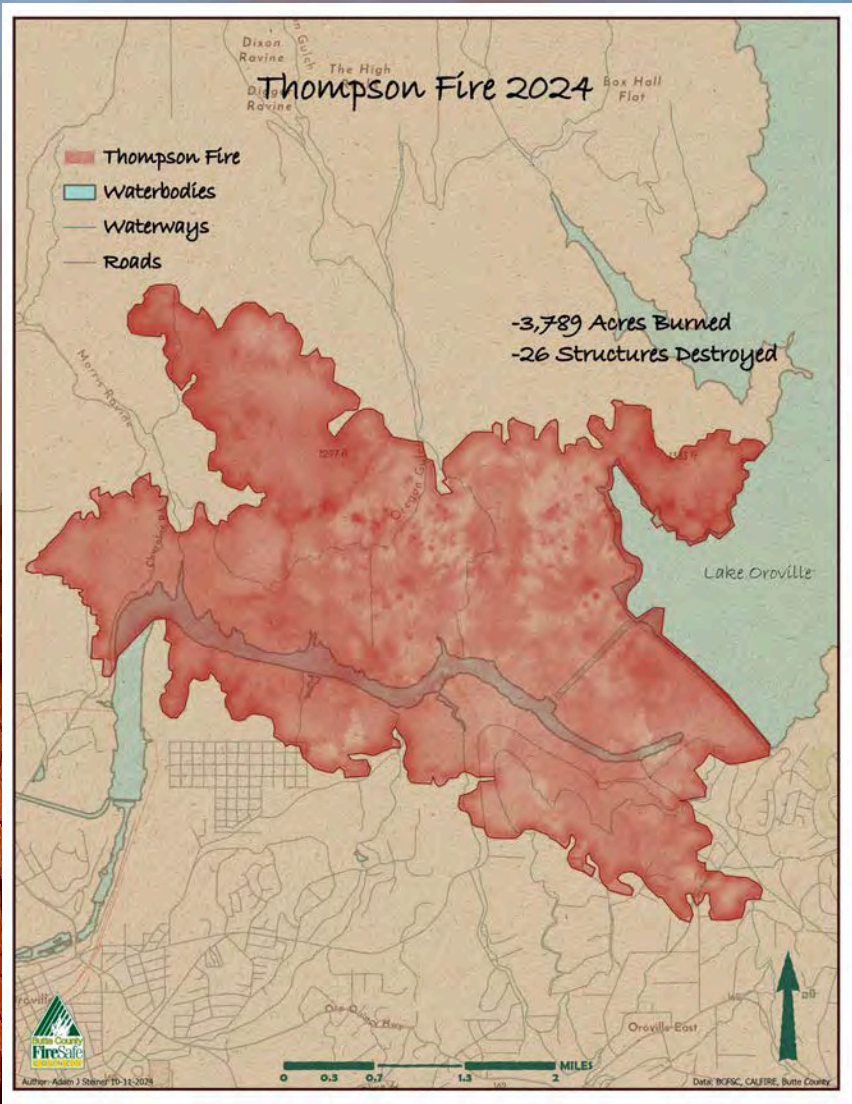

The forest stretched across the mountainsides
A backcountry patchwork quilt
A summer haven
Complete with lakes, trails and thick trees

Shadows held hands with mosquitoes in open meadows
Old fruit trees gathered sunshine

The happy harmony was disrupted
As the blaze climbed out of the canyon
Spreading for weeks
The green now turned black
Devastation for miles

C.J.W.

The Thompson Fire started on July 2, and lasted through the 8th of 2024. The fire began from a firework near Thompson Flat and impacted many Lake Oroville recreation facilities.

Burning Through our Memories

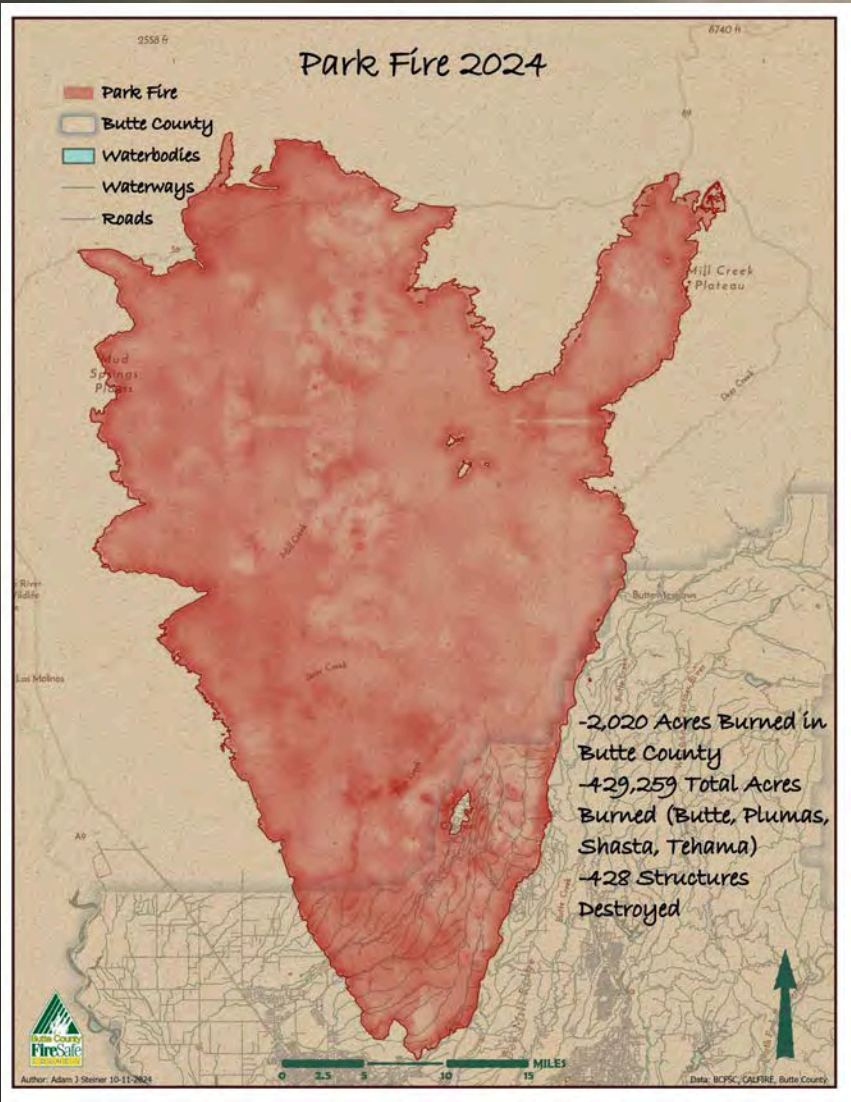

I hoped I'd never see you there
On a windy July day
There on the hillside among the blue oaks

Your flames running next to the paths
Reserved for mountain bikes and horses
You burned right through our memories

Moving past the Oroville Dam
Creating panic
People taking their fear with them
Fear that lasts

C.J.W.

The Park Fire started on July 24, 2024, and continued until September 26. Caused by arson, the fire spread rapidly, burning 4,000 to 5,000 acres per hour on the first day. A major success in wildfire preparedness was demonstrated in Cohasset, where a 717-acre "green island" remained unburned thanks to collaborative partner projects. Notably, there were no fatalities during this wildfire.

Gingerbread Man

A fire on the hillside
Travelling through grass and brush
First walking then running through the park

Into the wildland
Like the gingerbread man
Who taunts his maker, “can’t catch me”

Late into the night we see the red glow in the sky
Consuming dry places,

Paula Daneluk, a public administrator and urban planner with over 30 years of experience, is the Director of Butte County Development Services. She has led major projects like fire recovery efforts, the Upper Ridge community plan, and a notable General Plan update. A skilled project manager, she founded an award-winning planning firm and has taught seminars and classes. Paula holds a degree in Public Administration, is a member of the American Institute of Certified Planners, and has presented nationally on planning and environmental issues.

Jacob Birdseye, born and raised in Paradise, CA, moved to Chico at 14 to study music and songwriting. When the 2018 Camp Fire destroyed his family's homes, he sheltered them in his own for a year to provide comfort. He continues to write music, work in Chico and Paradise, and support the community, helping those impacted by the Butte County fires.

Peggy Moak, a Concow resident since 1984, is married to fourth-generation resident Pete Moak. She had a long career in financial services, retiring as Butte County Treasurer and Tax Collector after 15 years of public service. Passionate about outdoor recreation and forest health, Peggy facilitated the Butte County Forest Advisory Committee and Federal/State Land Use Coordination Committee. She continued in these roles until August 2023, when she helped form the Butte County Collaborative Group, focusing on wildfire mitigation and forest health.

Lethicia Watson is an Estom Yumeka Maidu woman of Enterprise Rancheria, where she serves on the Youth and Cultural Committees. A devoted mother and storyteller, she writes to honor the voices and histories that shape her people. In the aftermath of the 2018 Camp Fire, while helping survivors at the tribal office, she witnessed stories of unimaginable loss and unshakable strength. Today, as a Tribal Liaison, she carries that same dedication forward, ensuring her community's voice is heard when environmental decisions are made, protecting both the land and the generations yet to come.

ABOUT US

The Butte County Fire Safe Council (BCFSC) is a grass-roots nonprofit that has been integral in Butte County's wildfire mitigation efforts since 1998. Over the past 25 years, the BCFSC has forged deep connections with the amazing people of Butte County who breathe life into our Wildland Urban Interface.

Our ethos of responsible wildland stewardship, interagency collaboration and community education is the driving force that fuels our passion for the work we feel privileged to do.

We are deeply committed to the long-term stewardship of the ridges, canyons, forests, streams, meadows, and communities that exist across Butte County – from Clipper Mills to Cohasset.

In recent years, the BCFSC's board and staff has had tremendous success in expanding the Firewise USA program, implementing hazard tree removal operations, enhancing evacuation preparedness, delivering youth education programs, establishing the Paradise Grazing Festival, no-cost Chipping program, as well as undertaking forest health and watershed protection on a holistic landscape-level.

You probably recognize our mascot, Wildfire Ready Raccoon, who is frequently spotted at our Ready in the Library events, local schools, as well as community events on the Ridge and beyond.

We hope to hear from you soon! Reach out to our team at the BCFSC office to learn more about our work and the programs we offer.

FORGED BY FIRE

A GRASSROOTS HISTORY

At the time of the 1999 Butte Lightning Complex, fire safe councils were just beginning in California, with the Butte County Fire Safe Council in its first year. This event spurred the formation of local fire safe councils. After the 2008 Humboldt Fire, our friend in preparedness, Wildfire Ready Raccoon, was born, thanks to community champion, Phil John.

We deeply appreciate the following key individuals for their dedication to wildfire safety across Butte County.

Mary Ellen Largent, Bruce McLean, Jeff Harter
Forest Ranch Preservation Alliance

Don Steel, Ed Chombea
Upper Ridge Preservation Alliance

Jake Albright, Carol Dower
Forbestown Fire Safe Council

Kathryn and Ray Weiss
Forbestown Fire Safe Council

Dennis Nay, Loren Gill
Berry Creek Fire Safe Council

Jim Broshears, Shirley Helmus
Paradise Ridge Fire Safe Council

Brenda Rightmyer, Marje Corey
Yankee Hill Fire Safe Council

Bert and Marilyn Coffman
Cohasset Fire Safe Council
